If we understand the origin and purose of the Fenian Brotherhood, it is to pose of the reman Brotherhood, it is to secure the independence of Ireland by force of arms. We look upon the scheme as vagarian and Utopian in the hast degree. The idea of Ireland coping with the British Empire is perfectly ridiculous. Those who engage in the rebellion will simply bring down upon devote the property of their friends and neighbors to ruin and confiscation. If the present troubles continue we may soon expect to see the whole of Ireland put under martial law, and a rigid and most annoying police establishment quartered in every town, village and hamlet. A curious phase of the movement is that the Roman Catholic hierarchy are generally, in fact universally, apposed to it, while the Catholic haity are fervently in favor of it as a mass. The Protestant Irish are just as generally opposed to the movement, and are ally opposed to the movement are semi-ally opposed to the movement are semi-ally opposed to the movemen ally opposed to the movement, and are thus brought into co-operation with the Catholic prelacy and priesthood. What the result of the whole agitation and commotion will be, no one can now say, but it seems to what of the whole agitation and commotion will be, no one can now say, but it seems to what of the whole agitation and commotion will be, no one can now say, but it seems to what of the whole agitation and commotion will be, no one can now say, but it seems to what of the whole agitation and commotion will be, no one can now say, but it seems to whole agitation and the whole agitation and commotion will be a seem to Church. All interdiction and maledic-tions have failed to keep the Irish tions have failed to keep the Irish Catholic laity out of the movement, which certainly is a very unusual incident in the history of that church.

The Constitutionalist, published at Augusta, (fin., has not been very much "reconstructed" yet we infer from the constructed of a leader before us. Up this way, those of us who read much, think that Harper's Weekly is rather a superior paper, and we recognize that it did the Union cause great service during the order to see General unval nominated as Senator. We suppose from all we hear that he will certainly be nominated.

Gen. T. M. Harris was in town yesterday. He goes this evening to Sich yet and to report for assignment to duity of Gen. Terry, who commands the Department of Virginia. It is quite likely that Gen. Harris will be re-assigned to the command at Predericksburg, at which place he was on duty a few weeks ago. Gen. Harris expected to be mustered out when he came home lately, and had sent in his resignation, promoted to a Major Generalship, and promoted to a finite system of the South.
